Acknowledgments

Naturally, I owe most to Ben Kerwin for the many hours of his time that he gave me for little financial reward over the years. I am indebted also to my other teachers, Tim Guttie, Maudie Naylor and her husband Bob, Willy and Alfie Harris and Hector Harrison, for work that was congenial to some of them but not all.

I am grateful to those members of Ben Kerwin's family who helped me in one way or another, in particular to his daughter Barbara and her husband Kevin Allen, of Burra, South Australia (later Broken Hill, New South Wales), and his daughter Joan and her husband Ron Dennis, of Roma, Queensland, with whom he was living during the periods when the major part of the fieldwork was carried out. They were friendly, cooperative and interested at all times. Ben's great-grandson Aaron Paterson was interested in recent years and helped with some useful information.

I thank my wife Rosalie, who came with me (with small children after the first year) on some field trips and kept me fed and washed. Also the many linguists whose brains I have picked over the years (including Claire Bowern, who gave me a copy of her unpublished work on Nhirrpi) and the anonymous referee who read the manuscript for Pacific Linguistics.

I wish to thank also the Australian Institute of Aboriginal Studies (now Australian Institute of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Studies) for financing all of the fieldwork and most of the analysis, and helping in other ways, and Monash University for equipment, typing and office accommodation during that time. The Burran and later Muda Aboriginal Corporations paid me for a little over a year, during which time the Institute for Aboriginal Development, Alice Springs, provided me with office accommodation and other services. The Queensland Herbarium, the Royal Botanic Gardens and National Herbarium, Sydney and the Royal Botanic Gardens and National Herbarium, Melbourne helped with information on plants. Thanks also to Helen Tolcher for some information, and to Brenda Thornley for the map.

Preface

Innamincka Words is one of a pair of companion volumes on Yandruwandha, a dialect of the language formerly spoken on the Cooper and Strzelecki Creeks and the country to the north of the Cooper, in the northeast corner of South Australia and a neighbouring strip of Queensland. The other volume is entitled Innamincka Talk: a grammar of the Innamincka dialect of Yandruwandha with notes on other dialects.

Innamincka Talk is a more technical work and is intended for specialists and for interested readers who are willing to put some time and effort into studying the language. Innamincka Words is for readers, especially descendants of the original people of the area, who are interested but not ready to undertake serious study of the language. It is also a necessary resource for users of Innamincka Talk.

These volumes document all that could be learnt from the last speakers of the language in the last years of their lives by a linguist who was involved with other languages at the same time. These were people who did not have a full knowledge of the culture of their forebears, but were highly competent, indeed brilliant, in the way they could teach what they knew to the linguist student. Although the volumes document only a small part of a rich culture, they are a tribute to the ability and diligence of the teachers.

1 Introduction

The Yandruwandha were one of a group of tribes speaking dialects of the same language and living in the Lakes Country of northeastern South Australia. Other names referring to people speaking other dialects of this language are Yawarrawarrka, Nhirrpi, Matja, Parlpmardramardra, Ngananhina, Ngapardandhirri and Ngurawola. Very little is known about some of these groups, and what detail we have is given in the introductory chapter of the grammar, which also gives more information on the speakers who provided the words, sentences and stories that are the basis for these two volumes.

The bulk of this dictionary has been compiled from Yandruwandha language recorded from Tim Guttie in 1967–68 and from Bennie Kerwin from 1968 to 1976. It is primarily in the dialect spoken around Innamincka. However, words from the Strzelecki dialect and from Yawarrawarrka also have been added; these were obtained mainly from Maudie Nylon, from 1970 to 1976, but some Yawarrawarrka was recorded also from Willy and Alfie Harris and their brother Hector Harrison in 1967. The material from the two latter dialects is less reliable; Maudie Nylon tended to confuse the two to some extent — excusable for a person who was probably closer to ninety than to eighty at the time and who was trying to give information in what was probably her fifth or sixth language, while the other three were much younger and much less knowledgeable. There are also a few Nhirrpi words from Alice Miller (recorded by Stephen Wurm in 1957 and transcribed by Claire Bown).

There are a number of words spelt in two different ways. In some of these cases one of these ways may not be correct, but I am not able to determine this from the recorded data. There may also be inconsistencies in the writing of some lexical items as one word or as two; for example, whether ‘finger’ is marawitju or mara witju. These words may be pronounced both ways, and the Yandruwandha people may decide on a rule for the way they are to be written. I have used hyphens to break up long words at the end of lines, but not much otherwise — only to break up reduplications of words of three syllables or longer (so paladi-paladi, but not palapaladi), to separate a couple of endings (nyadi ‘like’ and ngada ‘while’) and for a few special compounds like ngarndri-ngapiri ‘parents’. Hyphens could be used more often if people prefer this.

All of the information on the words is given in the first part, Yandruwandha to English. The second part, English to Yandruwandha, is intended just for finding words. You should then go to the first part to get further information on the word, including example sentences (which are preceded by •) and additional notes (which are preceded by #). This is particularly important if an English entry has two or more Yandruwandha equivalents, because these might be quite different. For example, two words are given for ‘grandfather’: papa and tjindra. But if you find these words in the first part you will see that papa is ‘mother’s father’ and tjindra is ‘father’s father’. They both have other meanings too. Another example: two words are given for ‘him’, yinha and nhunggani. But nhunggani only means ‘him’ in expressions like ‘to him’, ‘for him’, ‘with him’ (in which it has an ending attached to it). In a sentence like ‘I saw him’ you couldn’t use nhunggani for him, only yinha.

2 Introduction

The form of an entry in the Yandruwandha-to-English section is: head word (the Yandruwandha word), its meaning or meanings in English, sometimes a note preceded by # giving further information, such as saying what dialect the word belongs to, often example sentences, each preceded by • and with the Yandruwandha sentence followed by an English translation and occasionally also by a more literal translation of all or part preceded by the abbreviation ‘lit.’; after the example sentences comes often the symbol # followed by further information about the word, often referring the reader to other words with the same or similar meaning. If an example sentence is not in Innamincka Yandruwandha it is labelled, for example (SY) (see final paragraph below). In the English-to-Yandruwandha section the headword is in English and Yandruwandha equivalents follow.

When the meaning of a word is given as two or more words (or phrases) separated by commas, these are thought of as just different aspects of the meaning or different ways of saying the same thing, although between them they should give a better idea of the range of meaning of the Yandruwandha word than any one of them would give. Some examples are ‘argue, have a row’ and ‘river, creek’. When the words are separated by semicolons they are thought of as different meanings, although closely related; for example ‘yawn’; ‘hiccough’; ‘burp’. In these cases example sentences illustrating various meanings are not separated. Sometimes in such cases the different meanings are labelled with a letter, (a), (b) etc., and in these cases examples illustrating (a) are given before (b) is introduced, and so on. Letters are used also to separate off meanings that apply only to some dialect(s) other than Innamincka Yandruwandha. Numbers — (1), (2) etc. — are used instead of letters when the meanings are rather more divergent, as for example in the kamiri entry. When there are two words with the same form but meanings that seem to be completely unrelated they are given as quite separate entries; for example, nhinda ‘shame’, ‘shyness’ and nhinda ‘size’; ‘shape’; ‘appearance’. Sometimes my judgment about these may be different from someone else’s, and, more importantly, may be different from what the native speakers would have thought (especially for a case like that of kamiri).

Occasionally the head word in an entry is something that has never been heard except in compounds; in these cases it is given in brackets and no meaning may be given for it. An example is (kaldri). This is then followed by subentries for compounds that include it.

The example sentences contain large numbers of endings on words, and these are listed separately and very briefly explained in the dictionary. They are explained in detail in the grammar, and will be explained in a less technical way in the following section. Occasionally an example sentence contains a word or part of a word which I do not understand or could not hear properly. These are marked with question marks, in brackets which may also enclose the part of the word concerned or, if it is a whole word, just follow it.

Abbreviations used in the dictionary include:

Eng (English)

Nh (Nhirrpi)

Wngu (Wangkangurru)

Yn (= Yandruwandha)

AWH (material from A.W. Howitt's 'Native tribes of south-east Australia')

BK (= Benny Kerwin, used especially when he gave something in Yawarrawarrka)

H (= material from one or more of the younger Yawarrawarrka informants)

MN (used sometimes for material from Maudie Nylon)

RYn (= material in Yandruwandha from J.G. Reuther's massive late 19th-century work on the Diyari or Dieri¹ who lived to the west of the Yandruwandha)

SY (= material in Strzelecki Yandruwandha from Maudie Nylon)

TG (= Tim Guttie)

Yw (= material in Yawarrawarrka from Maudie Nylon)

When an abbreviation follows # it means that it applies to the preceding word; when it is in parentheses and following • it applies to the example sentence which follows; when it is in parentheses and preceding an alternative form of a word it applies to that alternative. So, for example, # SY, Yw • (SY) means 'this word occurs in Strzelecki Yandruwandha and Yawarrawarrka; the following example is from Strzelecki Yandruwandha'; warrayi, (Yw) warranty means the Yawarrawarrka version is warranty. The sign = in an entry means 'same as'. Yandruwandha information from Benny Kerwin (which forms the bulk of the dictionary) and Tim Guttie (whose dialect is the same as Benny's, apart from the odd word) is not identified. Strzelecki Yandruwandha and Yawarrawarrka words are identified only when they are different from Innamincka Yandruwandha or when there is no corresponding Innamincka dialect word known (in which case the odds are fairly high that the Innamincka dialect word is the same).

1.1 A short introduction to the Yandruwandha language

(a) The pronunciation of Yandruwandha words

The spelling system of Yandruwandha uses seventeen of the letters in the English alphabet, but a couple of these are used only as part of digraphs (pairs of letters that are used together to represent a single sound, like sh and th in English). The alphabet is, as one would expect, much less suitable for a language like Yandruwandha than it is for English (and it is far from ideal for English too). One result of this is that there are many more digraphs in Yandruwandha than in English, and there are two trigraphs — sounds written with three letters (rdl, rdr below). Yandruwandha has fewer vowel sounds than English, but more consonants.

The following are the consonants of Yandruwandha and their approximate pronunciations. They are not listed in alphabetical order, but are in groups of similar sounds. Some of them are not like any sounds in English and require some practice to learn.

4 Introduction

p, like p in English but not pronounced as strongly, more like p in spot than p in pot.

b, like English b.

k, like k (or hard c) in English but not pronounced as strongly, more like c in Scot than c in cot.

g, like English g.

t, like t in English but not pronounced as strongly, more like t in stop than t in top.

d, like English d when it comes at the beginning of a word or after n, but pronounced with a quicker movement of the tongue when it comes between vowels, the way some people pronounce r.

th, not like English th but more like the combination of t and th in, for example, got them (pronounced quickly). The tongue touches the back of the front teeth.

dh, something like the combination of d and th in, for example, had them (pronounced quickly). The tongue touches the back of the front teeth.

tj, something like ch in English but cut short.

dj, something like j in English but cut short.

rt, like t except that the tongue tip touches the roof of the mouth not just behind and above the upper front teeth, as in t, but further back.

rd, like d except that the tongue tip is further back, as for rt.

m, as in English.

ng, as in English hangar, not like in finger (this combination of sounds is spelt ngg in Yandruwandha) or in danger (this combination of sounds is spelt ndj in Yandruwandha). Often comes at the beginning of a word, and this can be a problem for English speakers.

n, as in English.

nh, like n but pronounced with the tongue touching the back of the front teeth, not above them. Like n in tenth.

ny, like the ny in canyon.

rn, like n except that the tongue tip touches the roof of the mouth not just behind and above the upper front teeth, as in n, but further back.

l, as in English.

lh, like l but pronounced with the tongue touching the back of the front teeth, not above them. Like l in filth.

ly, like lli in million.

rl, like l except that the tongue tip touches the roof of the mouth not just behind and above the upper front teeth, as in l, but further back.

dl, as in English fiddler.

rdl, like dl except that the tongue tip touches the roof of the mouth not just behind and above the upper front teeth, as in dl, but further back.

rr, a rolled r sound, like what you might hear in Scottish English.

dr, starts as a d and ends up as a rr (rolled r).

rdr, starts as an rd and ends up as a rr (rolled r).

w, as in English.

y, as in English.

r, as in Australian English.

The vowels in Yandruwandha can be written with just three letters, a, i and u. Sometimes you hear sounds like e or o, but these are just variants of other vowels influenced by the consonants near them, just as, for example, the first vowel of English wallaby is written with a but pronounced like o because of the influence of the w.

a is generally pronounced like English u in cut, but can be more like o after w and more like a in cat after y.

i is normally like i in hit.

u is generally like u in put.

Some minor simplifications are made in the spelling of Yandruwandha words. Certain consonant clusters (pairs of consonants together) are simplified in the spelling in that a h, a y or an r are left out. Thus nth (a cluster of nh + th) is written instead of nhth, ndh instead of nhdh, lth instead of lhth. The others are ntj instead of nytj, ndj instead of nydj, ltj instead of lytj, rnt instead of rnrt, rnd instead of rnrd, rndr instead of rnrd. Another simplification is the omission of the first r when the sounds rd and rdr occur at the beginning of a word. So, for example, drama, not rdrama, ‘cut’. When there is a cluster of the sounds n and g a dot is written between them, to distinguish this combination from the single sound written ng. For example, thawanga means ‘will go’, thawan.ga ‘went some time ago’.

The main stress (or accent) in Yandruwandha words is on the first syllable. So, for example, kala is more like colour in this respect than galah and karta is more like cutter than catarrh. It is in the three-syllable words that English speakers are most likely to get the stress wrong: makita has a tune like marketer, not like mosquito; murali like morally not medallion. It is very common in English for the first vowel to be weak and unclear: the first o in tomato is not at all like a clear strong o (as it is in Thomas), and hardly sounds different from the first e in temerity, the first a in Tamara or the first i in timidity. This never happens in Yandruwandha; the first vowel is always strong and clear.

(b) The grammar of Yandruwandha

A major difference in the way Yandruwandha works compared to English is that Yandruwandha makes far more use of suffixes (endings put on words, like -ing or -ed or -ness in English) to show the relationship between words in a sentence. For many of the functions that are performed by suffixes in Yandruwandha, English uses prepositions (words like ‘in’, ‘by’, ‘from’, ‘through’ that normally go before the word they refer to) or simply relies on the order of the words in a sentence.

For example, to show the location of something in English we use in or at or on or between or various other prepositions. Yandruwandha uses a suffix like -yi, which has the same function as some (not all) of those prepositions. In English we say ‘He’s hiding in the hole’; in Yandruwandha we might say ‘Mingkayi nhutjadu purripandhirnanga’, literally ‘hole-in he-there hide-down-is.doing’. To illustrate the function of word order in English we have the sentence: ‘The dog killed a snake’. If we changed the order to ‘A snake killed the dog’ we would have a sentence with a quite different meaning, because the one that is mentioned first is the one that did the action. The only way we can change the order without changing the meaning is to make some other change at the same time, for example changing ‘killed’ to ‘was killed by’. In Yandruwandha we can say ‘Pandili kathikathi parndrina’, in which the word pandi ‘dog’ has an ending -li which specifies it as being the subject of the verb, the one that killed. If we say ‘Kathikathi pandili parndrina’, putting the word for ‘snake’ first (which is less likely but quite possible), the meaning is still the same, because the word for ‘dog’ is still the one that has the suffix -li. (There are no words in the Yandruwandha sentence translated as ‘the’ or ‘a’.)

If, say, the subject is a phrase with more than one word — say ‘that dog’ — we could say ‘Pandi nhuludu kathikathi parndrina’ and this time we know that nhuludu goes with pandi, because it follows it, and that these two words express the subject of the sentence even though pandi doesn’t have -li any more, because the word nhuludu has to be the subject or part of the subject of this type of sentence; if it was the object or part of the object it would be yintjadu instead. It is possible also for the words in the phrase to be separated, and then the pandi would need the ending to show that it belonged with nhuludu: ‘Pandili kathikathi parndrina nhuludu’. This is something like saying ‘A dog killed a snake — that one did’.

The word purripandhirnanga in the first of the Yandruwandha sentences above illustrates another prominent feature of the language. It is made up of purri ‘hide’, pandhi ‘down’ and the suffix -rnanga ‘is doing’. Because the hiding is being done in a hole it is likely that the person or thing is crouching, and so it is appropriate (but not obligatory) to augment the verb with pandhi to emphasise this aspect of it. This is very common, and a number of common words, such as the verbs nhina ‘sit, stay’, thawa ‘go’, thika ‘return’, windri ‘go in’, thayi ‘eat’ and the adverbs thalka ‘up’, pada ‘in’ and yukarra ‘at night’, are used in this way to add extra meaning to a verb.

The system of pronouns in Yandruwandha is more complex than that in English. Nominative personal pronouns (used as subject of a sentence) in English are I, you, he, she, it, we, they. Yandruwandha has nganyi ‘I’ (and ngathu when it is subject of a verb that has an object), yini ‘you (one person)’ (and yundru when it is subject of a verb that has an object), yula ‘you (two)’, yuda ‘you (more than two)’, nhunu ‘he’ or ‘it’, nhani ‘she’, ngaldra ‘we (you and I)’, ngali ‘we (two, not including you)’ (= ‘he and I’ or ‘she and I’), ngandra ‘we (more than two, including you)’, ngani ‘we (more than two, not including you)’, pula ‘they (two)’, thana ‘they (more than two)’. These pronouns are repeated in a slightly different order in the following table, which also has the object forms (corresponding to English ‘me’, ‘you’, ‘him’, ‘her’, ‘it’, ‘us’, ‘them’) and the genitive forms (corresponding to English ‘my’, ‘your’, ‘his’, ‘her’, ‘its’, ‘our’, ‘their’).

The genitives can combine with other endings that go on nouns. The third person pronouns, corresponding to English ‘he’, ‘she’, ‘they’ and so on, function also as demonstrative adjectives or demonstrative pronouns like ‘this’ and ‘that’ and take endings -yi meaning ‘here’ and -du (and some other variations) meaning ‘there’, so nhunuyi is ‘this (male or thing)’ and nhunudu (and the more common variant nhutjadu) means ‘that (male or thing)’. Other roots that can combine with these endings -yi and -du (and others), but form only demonstrative adjectives and pronouns and not personal pronouns, are nhinggi and nhuku. For more detail see the dictionary entries or, better, the grammar volume, Innaminka Talk.

The following section is a list of all the suffixes that we know of in the language, with a short description of what the function of each is. A more detailed description of each, with examples, can be found in the grammar volume. The list is in alphabetical order, so I will list here the most common of the suffixes that are used on nouns and on verbs. On nouns, -li, -ngadi, -yi, -nguda, -puru, -mindji, -pani, -ngurru; on verbs -na, -nhana, -lapurra, -rla, -nga, -malka, -yi, -ri, -rnanga, -rlayi, -ini, -ni, -padipadini, -yindri. On all words the emphatic suffixes, especially -la and -tji, are very common. It is common for a word, especially a verb, to have two or three or more suffixes.

1.2 Alphabetical list of suffixes

Suffixes used only in Yawarrawarrka are usually cross-referred to the corresponding suffix in Yandruwandha. References such as 'See §11.14' are to relevant sections of the grammar volume, and are intended for readers who are sufficiently interested to study the particular point in more detail; others need not worry about them. The word or abbreviation, often in small capitals, given at the end of each description is the identification used for this suffix in interlinear translations in the grammar volume, Innamincka Talk, and in the stories.

- a-* added to a verb stem preceding -rla to state that something which was not happening before is happening at the time of speaking. See §11.15. NOW
- ardi* added to any word to add emphasis. See §18.4. EMPH
- ey* distorts final vowel of a word, for emphasis. See §3.2.1 DISTORT
- du* added to a third person or demonstrative pronoun or location word to show that the person(s) or thing(s) concerned is not close to the speaker. Can be translated 'there'. Same as -tjadu. THERE
- indri* used in Yawarrawarrka with the same function as -ri in Yandruwandha. UNSP
- ini* added to a verb stem ending in a to convert it into a form that can have noun endings added to it. See -ni. See §10.6. GER
- ipi* added to a verb stem in Yawarrawarrka to warn that an undesirable event may occur. See -yi. POT

3 English-Yandruwandha finderlist

Entries in this section are kept brief. You should go to the Yandruwandha to English section for more information. Where a word in the Yandruwandha to English section has a simple form and a more complex form, such as drama, dramardrama or kantu, kathi kantu, usually only the simple form is given in the English to Yandruwandha section. Alternative pronunciations are not given but alternative forms are, if one is not simply derived from the other. So, for example, kulpinayindri and kulpinawaga are both given. The Innamincka Yandruwandha form is given; a form from another dialect is given (but not identified as such) only if an Innamincka form is not known or if it is quite different. Some items are given in groups, such as ‘birds, types of’ or ‘plants, types of’, although many of the members of these groups also have their own entries, such as ‘crow’ or ‘coolibah’, and some appear instead in smaller groups, such as ‘ducks, types of’ or ‘Acacias’.

Entries in this section are generally in alphabetical order, but where an entry consists of more than one word they are in alphabetical order of the important word or words. So, for example, to find ‘give birth’, look for where ‘birth’ would be; for ‘the bush’ look for ‘bush’. In cases like these the word determining the place of the entry is underlined, so ‘give birth’. Often such entries will be in two places.

Placenames are not included in this list. There is a separate list of them following it. Kinship terms are included in the list, but there is also a (very tentative) kinship chart at the end. This involves some assumptions based on the situation in other languages, and is probably not completely correct.

4 Appendix

4.1 Naming of new concepts

Concepts introduced by the white men may be expressed by one of three methods, or by a combination of two of these:

- (a) extension of the meaning of an existing word,
- (b) coining of an expression from existing words,
- (c) borrowing of the English word (not necessarily directly).

Examples of (a) include kuntha, the name of a herbaceous plant growing at the water's edge in waterholes, and called by the whites 'pennyroyal' or 'tea bush' (because a drink was brewed with it), and extended to mean 'tea'; purtu 'goods', 'belongings', extended to mean 'swag'; yurrukuyurru 'dilly bag', extended to 'port' (i.e. 'suitcase'); mardrathandra 'stone' (mardra is 'stone' in general; thandra 'nut in bloodwood tree') and mardramitji 'stone' (mitji 'eye', 'seed', may be used as a compound element for small rounded objects) both extended to include 'bullet'; and wathi 'tree' to any machinery, tools or other metal or wooden objects. (It is likely that wathi also had, traditionally, a meaning 'thing (in general)', as the corresponding word has in Arrernte and Western Desert languages, among others.) Other probable cases, in which the original meaning of the word is not known, are wardama 'motor car' and yulya 'policeman' (which is found also in Diyari). A verb whose meaning has been extended is draka 'to pierce', also now 'to write'.

Examples of (b) include a number involving the gerund formative -ini, which nominalises the verb. For example, ngapa patjikini 'sugar' (ngapa 'water', patji 'good', -ka 'causative', literally something like 'water-improver'), purtuwalthini 'swagman' (purtu cf. (a), waltha 'to carry', lit. 'swag-carrier'), padla warrkini 'shovel' (padla 'ground', warrka 'to throw', 'ground-thrower'), wathi patjipatjikini 'mechanic' (wathi cf. (a), patji 'good', -ka 'causative', 'machine-fixer'). Examples not of this type include the verbs mininhina 'to drive along (e.g. in a car)' (mini 'to run', nhina 'to sit') and thukayindri 'to ride (a horse)' (thuka 'to carry', -yindri 'reflexive/reciprocal/intransitive/applicative', something like 'carry yourself') and the nouns puka patji 'cake' (puka 'tucker', patji 'good') and ngapa kaldri 'alcoholic drink' (ngapa 'water', kaldri 'bitter').

Examples of type (c) can be further classified, imprecisely, according to how fully they are assimilated into Yandruwandha — changed so that they fit the Yandruwandha sound system. Words which are unassimilated or only slightly assimilated, include [stɔːkiˈpa]

'storekeeper' (also [tɔ:ki'pa], a little more assimilated, and compare thuwa 'store'; bagi 'buggy' (also pagi, which is fully assimilated) and [pu[æŋkət] 'blanket'. These are probably on-the-spot borrowings by the informant, as may be some of the next group.

Words which are partly assimilated — in that, for example, a fricative has become an affricate but not yet a stop, or a consonant cluster has been broken up but the main stress has not been transferred to the new initial syllable so formed, or a final vowel has been added but a consonant cluster not normally permissible in Yandruwandha remains — include [tʃúgə] 'sugar' (also tjuga, which is fully assimilated), [buʃádɬu] (or [búʃádɬu]) 'bridle', mitji padna ([pádɪŋa]) 'button' (for mitji see in examples of (a)), tjadəla 'saddle' (also tjadla, which although closer to the English form also conforms more closely to Yandruwandha phonotactics), paypa 'pipe', [páynʔputu] 'pannikin' (pintpot), dhibila 'devil', [dʰá:pə] 'supper', rabiti 'rabbit'. Perhaps walypala 'white man' should be included here, as lyp does not occur in native words.

Most of the borrowed words attested are fully assimilated. In some cases they are compounded with an appropriate classifier, as puka paka 'tobacco' (puka 'vegetable food'), wathi mutuka 'motorcar' (wathi 'wooden — and now also metal — object'), wathi ngayana 'a piece of iron', maka matji 'matches' (maka 'fire'), kathi puluka 'bullock'. The origin and meaning or function of the addition yithi in wipayithi 'whip' (also wibu) are not known. There are very few verbs: two have verb stem formatives added — wakana 'to work' (-na 'inchoative', often meaning 'become') and kandama 'to count' (-ma 'causative') — while one seems to be derived from the English present participle/gerund — wipingV 'to sweep' (the final vowel, written V here, is unknown because only the nominalised form has been heard).

The origin of tjambaka (the well-known word jumbuck) 'sheep' is not known (see Dixon, Ramson and Thomas (1990) Australian Aboriginal words in English: their origin and meaning, p.67). Words which have come into Yandruwandha from other Aboriginal languages via English include kundi 'house', wadlumbada 'white woman' ('white lubra') and kabuta 'hat' (Dixon, Ramson and Thomas pp.199, 170 and 198 — re 'cobra').

Fully assimilated borrowed words not already mentioned are listed below:

tjawurra	'trousers'
pilta	'belt'
tjata	'shirt'
kuta	'coat'
puruka	'dress' (from 'frock')
drupa	'rope'
wilpada	'wagon' (from 'wheelbarrow')
makita	'rifle' (from 'musket')
mayatha	'boss' (from 'master')
thakumani	'stockman'
milimani	'mailman'
pakitjamba	'buckjumper'
papurla	'hobble'
thaltawata	'sea' (from 'saltwater')
thantjipa, thantjiyipa	'town' (from 'township')
thuwa	'store'

tjida	'shearer'
thupa	'soap'
thirri ~ thirriṯa ~ thirriṯirri	'cotton' (from 'thread')
pipa	'paper', 'letter'
tjipa	'sheep'

Many of the adaptations exemplified by these borrowings are obvious, such as replacement of English initial /b/ by p, /tʃ/ (usually written ch or tch) by tj, final /ə/ (often written er, as in better) by a. Others are not so obvious but the majority are predictable; these include, for single consonants, /ʃ/ (= sh) by tj, /s/ by th, initial /t/ by th (since initial /t/, /rt/, /d/ and /dh/ are not permitted in Yandruwandha the only other possibility is /rd/), /z/ by rr and initial /r/ by rdr; for consonant clusters /st/ replaced by th (medially as well as initially), /sk/ by k, /sw/ by w, /nsh/ by ntj and /fr/ by pVr (V represents any vowel); for vowels /au/ by a (or in one case awu), /ə/ by a, /ɒ/ (the sound of o in got) by a (except that it is u in puruka), /ɛ/ (the sound of e in get) by i, /i:/ (like the ee in sheep) by i, /ou/ by u. The final vowel added when the English word ends in a consonant is usually a, although there are three examples of i and one of u (wipu). Final /z/ has been deleted in two words. ng has been preposed before initial /a/ (in ngayana). Other less easily explained correspondences are between initial /tr/ and tj, initial /θr/ and thirr, /a:/ and aya, (aa also heard), /ɒ/ and u, /i/ and iyi [iː]

4.3 Kinship

The kinship system, the way people talk about family, is very different in Aboriginal languages in general from the way things are organised for speakers of English. As a result, the translation of a kinship term (a name for a type of relation) can be misleading. For example, ngarndri is translated as 'mother', but in English when we use the word 'mother' it generally refers to one particular person; for me, my mother is the one who gave birth to me, and nobody else. In the Aboriginal system, at least in many parts of Australia if not everywhere, everyone in the whole of society can be called by a kinship term. The word that we translate as 'mother' refers also to 'mother's sisters' (in our English system) and to 'mother's mother's sisters' daughters' and to various other people. Similarly, ngapiri means 'father' but also 'father's brother' and various others. The same sort of thing (with differences in the details) applies to all other kinship terms.

In Yandruwandha, the variety of ways of talking about kinship were probably very complex, as they are or were in other languages of inland Australia, but the last speakers did not have a full grasp of them. This is a common situation when a language is going out of use and being replaced by another; speakers forget terminology when there is no-one in their community to whom it would apply. This is worse when the replacement language is English because of the radically different kinship system — the rules by which people decide how they are related to others, what to call them and how to behave with them are very different.

Some details could be filled in from knowledge of closely related languages. For example, a term used for a grandparent can be assumed to have been used also for the grandparent's brothers and sisters, and to have been used also by the grandparent for the corresponding grandchild. Thus, for example, I call my mother's mother kanyini, and she also calls me by the same name. I would probably also call her brothers and sisters kanyini, and they would all call me by the same term. However, no attempt is made in the dictionary entries here to describe the full range of likely meanings of any kinship term, and usually only the most basic meaning is given.

Some other differences between Yandruwandha and English are:

Yandruwandha has a word for 'elder brother', a word for 'elder sister', and a word for 'younger brother or sister' (they are not distinguished, unless you add a word like 'male' or 'female') while English has just the words 'brother' and 'sister' (although, of course, you can add words like 'elder', 'younger', 'big', 'little');

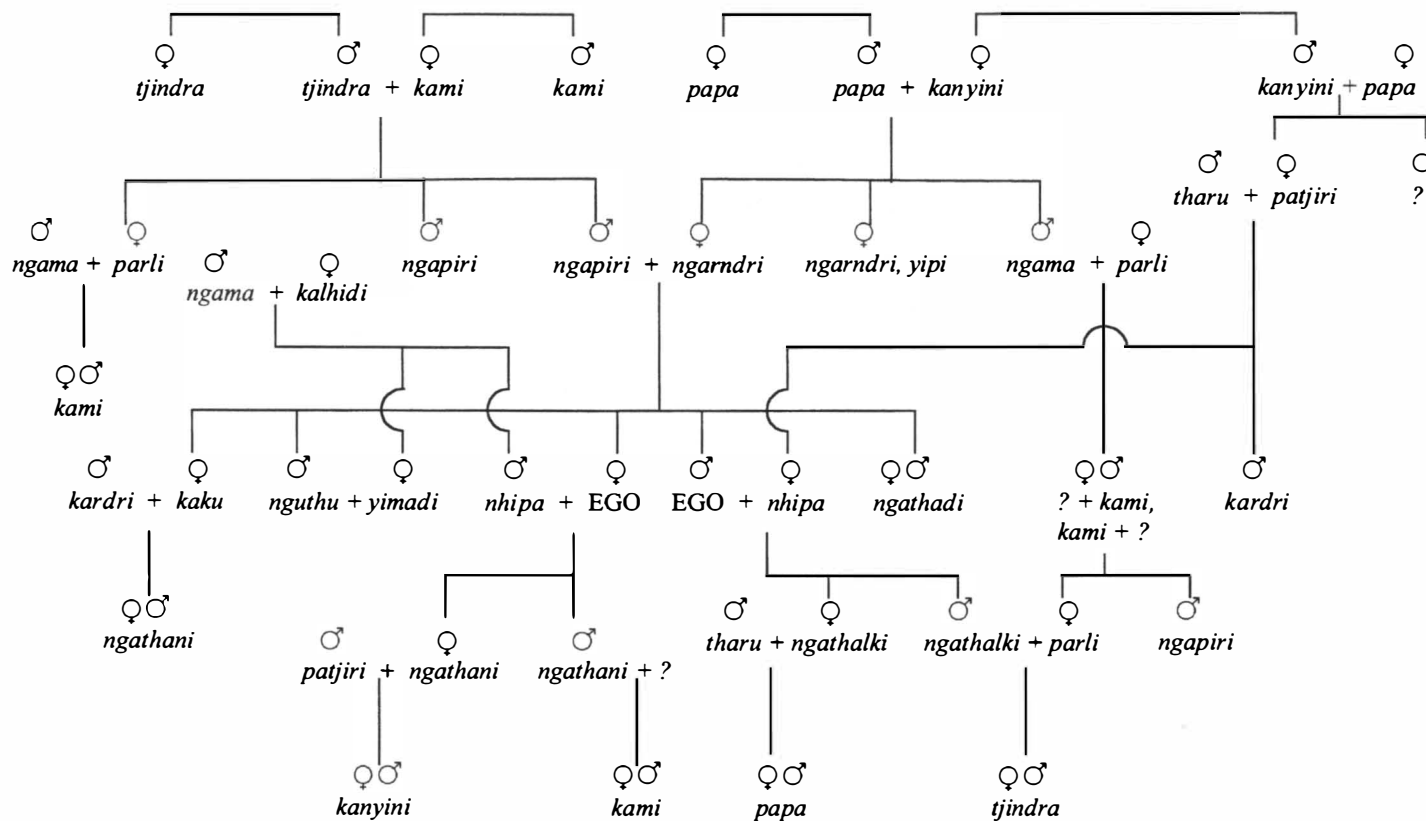

Since my father's brother is also a father to me, the word that would normally be translated as 'uncle' (ngama) applies only to my mother's brothers (and certain others more distantly related), and similarly my aunts are my father's sisters but not my mother's sisters;

Instead of having a word equivalent to 'son' and a word equivalent to 'daughter', Yandruwandha has a word ngathani that a woman uses for her own children (sons or daughters) and her sisters' children, and a man would use this word also for his sisters' children, and a word ngathalki that a man uses for his own children or that people of both sexes use for their brothers' children;

Yandruwandha has four separate words for grandparents — kanyini 'mother's mother', papa 'mother's father', kami 'father's mother' and tjindra 'father's father', while English has the same words, grandfather and grandmother, that are used for grandparents on both the maternal and the paternal side;

A kami in your own generation is equivalent to a cousin, but is used only for father's sister's children and mother's brother's children (and certain others more distant); father's brother's children and mother's sister's children are regarded as brothers and sisters.

Some other differences can be discovered by studying the kinship chart, which, however, is incomplete and in some parts unreliable. In this chart, the conventional symbols for male, a circle with an arrow on the upper right, and female, a circle with a cross underneath, are used. A + sign means 'marries' and a line going down from this, or sometimes down and across and down again, leads to the children of that couple. EGO means 'me'.

Yandruwandha kinship chart

♀ represents females; ♂ males; EGO means me; + means marries

5 Stories and texts

The following two sections comprise (§5.1) an account of some features of the life of the Yandruwandha before contact with Europeans, told by Benny Kerwin, and (§5.2) a collection of stories and fragments of stories, mostly from Benny Kerwin but with three short ones by Tim Guttie.

The texts are broken up into numbered sentences; the Yandruwandha text of each comes first, and under each line of this there is an interlinear translation — a line giving a detailed literal translation, word by word. This is mainly for the use of those people who are particularly interested in the grammar and would have a copy of the grammar volume, Innamincka Talk. Other readers can skip these lines. Some Yandruwandha words have hyphens to help people who are using the interlinear translation. At the end of each sentence (in §5.1), or at the end of each story (in §5.2) a free (plain English) translation is given. The text is broken up into sections according to the topic.

A question mark in an interlinear translation denotes that the meaning or function of a suffix (or, less commonly, a stem) is unknown, or that a word cannot be heard clearly and I am guessing. (?) after a translation means that I am particularly unsure of it.

Many sentences are introduced by ngapala, glossed ‘well’ or ‘then’, or ngala ‘then’ and these words are often more or less meaningless (like, for example, English ‘well’) and need not appear in a free translation.

Marking of words for number in Yandruwandha (equivalent to putting s on the end of a word in English, as in boys) is optional and not common; thus the use of plural number in the free translation is governed usually by the sense of the sentence and not by the use of a plural form in the original text.

5.1 An ethnographic text [A]¹

The following description of some features of the life of the Aboriginal people of the Innamincka area before its disruption by white settlers is a corrected and adapted version of the paper ‘The land of stone chips’ (Kerwin & Breen 1981). Most of it was given in a single long Yandruwandha text in 1972, repeated with modifications a few days later. It was translated by Breen, with substantial help from Kerwin. Unfortunately, Ben Kerwin died before all details of the translation could be checked. The texts were edited and combined by Breen to give the following account.² The first text, in substantially unedited form, has been published (together with biographical notes on Ben Kerwin) in Hercus and Sutton (1986).

The title of the Oceania paper is based on the name that the Innamincka people called themselves: Thayipilthirringuda. This comprises the word thayi 'grinding stone', usually used in conjunction with the generic term mardra 'stone', as mardra thayi, pilthirri 'stone chips' and -nguda 'from'. This name arises from the presence at Innamincka of deposits of sandstone from which grinding stones were quarried, and refers to the waste material — stone chips — from the quarrying. The name can, therefore, be freely translated as 'people from the land of stone chips'.

The text is broken up into sentences according to the topic. A more or less free translation follows each sentence. This is sometimes by Kerwin, sometimes by Breen; Kerwin's translations are usually freer. The translation of a sentence is often followed by an explanatory note or notes. These are cross-referenced to the number of the sentence, and often include additional information given by the narrator. Many of these notes have been deleted as unnecessary now, given the grammar and dictionary.

Usage of tense in the Yandruwandha text does not seem to be entirely consistent; however, this impression may be due to my lack of knowledge of the range of uses of the various tense and other inflections.

No attempt has been made to compare this text with other published material on the culture of this or similar areas. Craig (1970)³ gives many references to such material.

I watched them make a bag net for catching fish while swimming in the water, and a cross net.

-tharra, in the second word, denotes completeness of the action: 'I saw it all'. (See also note to 63.) Yuka means 'catch fish by swimming with the net and sweeping the fish up into it'. A cross net is a net that is stretched across the river.

² The text as published here contains three long unbroken extracts from the first version (transcript D): lines 1–37, 99–121, 141–160. Most of the remainder is from that version, but not in the original order. Lines taken from the second version (transcript E) are: 54–57, 63, 77, 78, 82, 85, 86, 89, 92, 95, 161–168. Material from other sources is lines 122–133 and 177–189. An aim of the editing was to produce a logically ordered account of some aspects of Yandruwandha culture.

7. He sat down again in the water. 8. Well, the two of them were feeling about (for the boomerang) and he told his brother, "Stand up and look at yourself." 9. So he stood up and looked at himself. "Oh! I'm circumcised now! Yes!" 12 & 13. "Come on, we'll go back and make a man out of our father."

14 & 15. Then they took the old man away (into the bush) and made a man of him. 16. Well then they took all their fathers, and they had a corroboree and circumcised one another. 17. They went everywhere and circumcised all the men in every place. 18. They went and visited the men [in all the other places]. 19. Only at Innamincka did none of the men have foreskins. 20. Addendum. The following song, associated with circumcision, was sung when the story was told in 1971. It is given in phonetic transcription with probable phonemic transcription and an attempt at translation. The language is not all modern Yandruwandha and BK did not understand it all.

1. This man, a long time ago, was travelling, and camped along the way. 2. Well, he had a dream, while he was lying there with his knee up, and he got his waddy from under his pillow, and just belted himself on the knee. 3. Well, he stretched out his leg because of the pain, because he had hit himself, thinking it was a devil he had seen. 4. Well, he packed his swag in the dark and walked on to the other camp, while the injury was still fresh, and he got there. 5. [He was asked,] "What are you coming in here so early for?" 6. "Oh, I hit myself with the waddy, because of my knee. 7. I thought I saw a devil sitting with me, in my dream, and I hit myself."

1. It was at Nockatunga,⁷ and again⁸ there was a man travelling on his own. 2. He camped overnight while he waited for some stockmen. 3. He put up a big windbreak. 4. He was a very frightened fellow. 5. Then [he made] his bed on one side of the fire and, in his fear, put a forked log on the other side, and covered it over with a blanket, and stood a stick up so that it would look like a man's knee sticking up.

6. Then he lay down on his side [of the fire]. 7. Well, he sang songs to himself [and talked to himself, to make out that there was someone with him]. 8. Then this other man arrived and knew that this fellow was frightened. 9. Well he was singing to himself, to keep the other man awake, but there was no other man, only the log lying there. 10. Then the other real person [sneaked up as close as he could] behind the windbreak, and jumped over [and grabbed him].⁹ 11. Then the first man screamed out(?) in fear. 12. "He's got me now, 13. Oh, the devil's got me now."

⁷ Nockatunga is ngaka thungga (or ngakathungga), lit. 'stinking water'.

⁸ This 'again' is a reference to text 9, which also involved a man travelling alone.

1. A long time ago, a mailman was travelling from Tibooburra, and he spent the night halfway, at Tenappera. 2. He camped at this place called Tenappera. 3. Then he went straight on to Durham Downs, while another white man was going down from Nappamerry. 4. Then he stayed the night at Durham Downs and then went back, 5. Well he went back while this white man was going that way, on foot.

6. He [the other man] made camp at an old hut [which was believed to be haunted]. 7. Then he made a fire and had his supper and went to bed. 8. Meanwhile the mailman arrived on horseback from Durham Downs. 9. "Oh, it looks like rain, I'll go and sleep in the old hut."

10. Well it was dark when he arrived, and he unloaded his things and hobbled the horses. 11. Then he took his swag inside. 12. He put the swag down by the fire and started to turn [the ashes] over with a twig. 13. "Oh! Well this fire's still alive!" 14. So he just got some [dry] leaves and threw them down [on the hot coals] and started to blow them. He was blowing them and the other old man heard him. 15. "It's the devil, near the fire!"

16. Well this other white man was frightened [because he thought that] the devil had come.

17 & 18. Then he got up, very carefully, and rolled up his swag and put it under his arm — hugged it in his arms — and started to sneak out. 19. Then the mailman heard him. 20. "Oh! Here's the devil!" 21. [The hut had a door at each end] Then while the white man sneaked out one door he [the mailman] could hear [what he thought was] the devil there.(?)

22. So he just jumped up and grabbed his swag and went out the door he had come in by. 23. Then he ducked back down to the horses. 24. He spent the night with the horses, while the other white man, the swagman — what? 25. He ran away without his boots, frightened, and camped [in the open], and the rain came down and wet them both.

26. Well, [next morning] the swagman rolled up his swag and went back up to the hut, and lit up the fire, 27. Meanwhile the mailman was rounding up his horses, and then he came back to the hut and ... (?) and tied up all the horses and went in, 28. "Hey, when did you get here?"

29. Where did you come from to get here so early?" 30. "Oh, I camped down there."(?)

31. "Then you got to this place yesterday? 32. So it was you who did it."(?) 33. ?

34. "Then it was you I saw blowing the fire." 35. "Yes, I was blowing the fire," 36. "Oh! You frightened me and I took my swag away and ducked off for fear of you being a devil."

37. "And I saw you going out (?) and I was frightened too and I ducked off down to the horses and spent the night with them."

38. Well, they both laughed then, the two white men, at the way they had frightened one another.

39. There was no devil at all.

Note: re 33, ngampu means 'nearly' in Strzelecki Yandruwandha, but its meaning in this dialect is not known.

1. Once I was travelling in a wagon — some white men picked me up. 2. They left me at Coopers Creek because the river was in flood. 3. We mightn't have got across with the wagon so they went on without me, to the town, and I stayed there at the river.

4. Meanwhile there were some blackfellows camping on an island.

5. Two of them came down to do some fishing. They sat and talked and caught fish on the other bank, while I was camped on the bank that sloped down opposite them. 6. Well they asked one another, "Where's he from?" 7. "I don't know." 8. "Well, ask him." 9. "Uh-uh, I'm shy, you do it." 10. "Uh-uh. You ask him." 11. "Uh-uh, you do it." 12. Then he just asked me in Dieri, and then in whitefellow language, "Where are you from?" 13. "Oh, I'm from a long way away, yes, a long way." 14. "He's from the sea then, from a far country. 15. He's a stranger, from the sea." 16. Well they were talking in Dieri, and I understood them. 17. They reckoned I was a stranger. 18. I understood them but I didn't tell them.

19. I stayed there for a while [Story-teller's translation: "stopping for a week or two"]. 20. One day another mob — another group — of blackfellows arrived. 21. They went across to the island and camped with them [i.e. the original ones]. 22. They told them who I was; 23. "That fellow's from Innaminacka. 24. I know him, and his parents and relations." 25. "Oh my God! [Story-teller's translation.] 26. How could we reckon he was a stranger, when he's one of our own people. 27. He's from this river. 28. He was born at Innaminacka. 29. Oh my God, I'm ashamed!" 30. They all laughed then. 31. Those two had thought I didn't understand. 32. I understood them and I didn't tell them. 33. I hadn't spoken to them in their language or in mine, only in the whitefellows'. 34. They had been very shy. 35. Oh, they must have laughed later on. 36. [Meaning not clear.]¹¹
